

Joining a Line Dance

Join a line dance at any club, party or reception by walking to the end of one line. Once in place, you can start stepping in time with the other dancers.

- If there is no more room on either side of the current lines, form a new line in the front or back.
- The rhythm of the line dance will be based on the tempo of the song playing. Step in time with the other dancers to stay on track.

Use the four walls of a room as reference points while line dancing. When practicing the different moves, make an effort to always be moving in a straight line either to the side, front and back. This will be especially important when you are dancing with groups of people.

Choose personal movements. While the steps and the counts of each dance are set, your own style will make your dancing stand out. You can choose how to move your hips, upper torso and arms to stand apart from the crowd.

- While some line dances have arm movements built in, most of the time you can hold your arms however you're comfortable. Hold your arms steady to your sides or in front of you, or you can even make up your own arm movements, as long as they're not too distracting.

Wear whatever attire is appropriate for your location. Line dances can be held at barns, nightclubs, school dances, wedding receptions or even birthday parties.
